

Passing of the Hat.

BY MADAME HYDRONO.

Paris—Chic Paris is already appearing at all sorts of fashionable functions without hats, but with complicated high collars dressed with ribbons, feathers, flowers and tulle in effects that recall the old-time theatre bonnet—that small contraption that barely covered the crown of the head. Clusters of backward turning loops of soft ribbon arranged at each side of the coils of the hair on the top of heads often mystify the observer as to their actual character, for more time than not they look more like crownless bonnets of novel shape than like hair ornaments. One or two big plumes making a stunning coiffure dress, placed so that the ends coil in graceful and becoming shape around the hair. Flowers—not only artificial but natural, are also employed, and so, too, are lengths of tulle tinted tulle. When tulle is used it is coiled with the hair, looped capriciously with flowers or feathers and often ends below the coil of hair in a rosette. Aigrettes are employed with many such coiffure arrangements.

Never have the shops and the alluring displays of laces in the form of skeleton coats, boleros and shaped emplacements of all sorts than may be seen now, and nothing gives so much distinction as a judicious use of such accessories.

Very few of these are built of only one sort of lace. They are more apt than not to consist of a bewildering blending of several kinds, with a touch of delicate embroidery added. The whole is, however, eminently satisfactory, and is apt to prove a most excellent investment in immediate use, turning a simple frock into a modish toilet, or giving a novel effect to a gown that has perhaps grown a little tiresome even if not worn. These pieces, large or small, can always be reshaped and used many times on different garments, or separated into motifs and thus applied in an endless variety of ways.

There is a decided revival of interest in dyed laces and nets and that is an excellent way to use laces that have become soiled and that one has grown tired of in the original color. These come out fresh and new from the hands of the dyer, and are toned to match exactly any material one may wish to use them with. The handsome laces, Irish, Venise, and all the expensive "real" laces, one can have perfectly renewed by skillful specialists in this work. Spotted nets are legion and perhaps a little hackneyed, but a new kind seen lately is certainly out of the common. It has a strong plain Brussels basis and is striped with rows of large silk spits. In an Empire gown it is silk up with the stripes running horizontally round the figure, and in the bodice the net is arranged in groups of tuckings, the spotted stripe forming a quaint border to each fold. Through each a satin ribbon is run matching the soft satin foundation which is nowadays used in preference to glaze or soft silk for this purpose.

Valenciennes and Cluny hold first place in popular favor for trimming laces for both lingerie gowns and tops, and for all the lightweight silk and silk combination fabrics that are made up in lingerie styles. For colored tops, silks have been quite outclassed by all the trills of silk and cotton fabrics that are bidding for favor at every shop one enters. Those done in lingerie fashion, with shaped emplacements of lace and baiste and braided patterns of German "Val" and Cluny insertion, make fascinatingly washable waists especially becoming.

Bridge coats of net and lace do duty for many occasions and assume almost any form. They are made in the place that lingerie waists occupy in day wear, and are similarly used with various skirts, producing effects that are of an elegance quite disproportionate to their cost. Many cases, and afford a field for the use of odds and ends of laces and trimmings that one has accumulated and been tempted into buying at some specially enticing sale counter.

A splendid white mohair toilet is thus described by a Paris advertisement writer: "It has a triple flounced skirt edged with fancy coarse braid, and a coat which is cut away in front with a waterfall back of the skirt, edged round the neck completely with braid. The skirt is a beautiful folded waistcoat of old brocade chemise of muslin with inner cuffs to match coming from beneath a strictly enormous button of old French enamel. This is worn with the most wonderful hat of white crinoline devoid of trimming except for a cache-pouffe of pale pastel tulle and an enormous cluster of real peacock feathers caught with an enamel buckle."

firm in the center. The sauce served with these requires a pint of cooked and strained tomato, one scant tablespoonful of butter, two tablespoonfuls of flour and a high seasoning of salt, pepper and onion juice.

As an accompaniment to the timbales cook a half cupful of farina in a pint of milk for half an hour, adding as it begins to thicken ten drops of onion juice, a half teaspoonful of salt and a dash of cayenne. When done stir in the beaten yolk of an egg, cooled to room temperature, and add a dash of salt.

Form into balls an inch in diameter, dip each in slightly beaten egg, roll in fine stale bread crumbs and just before the meal fry (four or five at a time) in smoking hot deep fat until golden brown. Drain on soft paper before serving.

While loin chops are preferred by many rib chops make the best appearance at a formal meal. Broil them and serve prettily garnished with parsley or watercress. A quart of shelled peas will be ample for four. In a saucepan melt together two tablespoonfuls of butter, a scant teaspoonful of salt, half a teaspoonful of white pepper and one scant teaspoonful of sugar. Turn the washed peas into this, cover and shake over the hottest part of the fire for five minutes; then add three tablespoonfuls of water, cover again and draw to one side, letting cook slowly until tender; if young from twenty-five to thirty minutes will be ample. More water may be added from time to time to keep them from burning but they should be almost dry when done.

Cannot shrimp be used when the fresh ones cannot be obtained. Open them several hours before they are needed to let them aerate well, rinsing thoroughly, then draining and drying on a cloth. Cut them in half inch bits, marinate with a French dressing and let stand on ice half an hour; then serve on a bed of lettuce and pass a good mayonnaise with them.

Teach Your Little Girl.
"That happiness is a matter of spirit, not of things."
"That it is possible only when every member of the household is considered. That to be in her own place, wherever that may be, a beautiful home-maker is the loveliest ambition any woman can have," says the Philadelpha Press.
"That it is better to be a beautiful home-maker than a fine housekeeper."
That the one indispensable quality in a home is happiness; every home, no matter how beautiful, which misses that, is a failure, but no home can wholly be a failure if it is happy.

Children's Teeth.

The belief that cutting the first teeth means illness for infants is an exploded theory, according to the head physician of the Nursery and Child's hospital, who declares that there is no more reason why a healthy young child should be sick when teething than at any other time.

"It has always been a subject of curiosity to me why the majority of mothers, and other persons, too, should think that a baby must have all sorts of ailments when getting its first teeth," he said. "Aside from being irritable, having a slight rise in temperature at morning or night, occasional distention of the stomach, and the desire to be constantly chewing on something, a normal child in good condition should be free from illness while cutting its teeth. The ailments in nine cases out of ten attributed to teething are caused from some other source, and for that reason a little one who appears to be weak and really indisposed should be placed under the care of a physician for treatment."

"There is no exact period at which teeth begin to show. Some babies have them sooner than others, but if none has appeared at the end of six months I would advise a mother to consult a doctor, for by that time the normal infant should have had several. The earliest and most natural way for them to come is in pairs, though I have known many youngsters to get four at a time."

"One of the first signs of coming teeth is the way the infants try to rub their gums; red, often swollen, appearances of the latter. They will chew on anything from a piece of rubber to a meat bone if allowed, and almost devour their own fists when there is nothing else to press against the gums to stop their itching."

"Most mothers and many physicians recommend giving pieces of ivory, rubber rings, metal tubes too large to swallow, bits of bone, etc., to chew on, but I would not advise any of these; if for no other reason, because I think they are not sanitary, and I know of nothing worse for a baby than to have something unclean in its mouth during teething time. If any of these things are given to the little ones I would urge that they be sterilized each time before being given to the youngsters to make sure that they are free from impurities."

"The only thing that I would suggest doing is to keep the baby's mouth clean and unless there is an inflammation in the gums nature provides amply for this. If necessary, however, the mouth should be swabbed out with soft pieces of cotton and lukewarm water when the gums are swollen. And once in the day, perhaps in the morning, it would be a good thing to gently massage the gums. By that I mean rub them slowly from right to left directly over the spot where the white white teeth are coming through. Five minutes of this should be long enough, or the skin may become irritated."

Egg Diet.

Believers in the raw egg diet contend that the egg should be eaten as soon after it is laid as possible. Several different methods of serving the eggs are in vogue, the most popular of which is in sherry wine or with vinegar.

A very little of the wine or vinegar is required in a glass merely to give a zest to the flavor of the egg, says What to Eat. When served with vinegar a drop of the liquid is first poured into an empty wine glass. Into this the egg is broken. Then the top is covered with another drop of vinegar and a sprinkling of salt and pepper. The egg is then swallowed whole.

Persons who have not tried the diet will be surprised at the ease with which the egg slips down the throat as well as the pleasant taste it leaves in the mouth. It is declared that half the benefit of the egg is lost when the yolk is broken in eating. The egg should be eaten before meals, especially before breakfast, but not every day.

An every-day diet is said to be dangerous because of the superabundance of sulphur it would produce in the system. It is advisable to discontinue the diet for as much as one or two weeks at a time and then to keep it up steadily for a few days or a week again.

"Drunkenness"

Cigarette and Tobacco
Habits Cured by

TRIB

The man who drinks whisky to excess is speeding his own heart, exhausting his vitality and drawing heavily on his future energy. Try this: Take a mouthful of whisky and see how long the nerves will allow you to hold it in your mouth; before a minute has passed you will swallow it to get rid of it. The nerves of taste and smell are so adjusted as to protect the stomach against dangerous foods and drinks, but when whisky is tossed down your throat the nerves are not given a chance to act upon it. Tobacco is less dangerous, but danger and tobacco can consistently be considered one and the same. Investigate this remedy while you are offering you an absolute guarantee with every treatment.
Price $2.50 per treatment.
